The well-known data scientist Gilad Lotan has also confirmed the same by explaining the reason behind why the #OccupyWallstreet movement didn't go in the realtime Twitter trends section in New York, even after a large volume of users and publicity.

He also said Velocity and spikes are also major factors when deciding the Twitter trend by utilising the TF-IDF (Term Frequency Inverse Document Frequency) the Twitter trending algorithm is more likely to rapidly highlight the topics.

Maybe this is the reason why we can see breaking news and topics keen to public interests instead of slowly or continuously growing news.

The Twitter algorithm also groups together the related twitter trending topics which help it to make the trending section clean and resourceful. As an example, if the people are using #BoycottProduct and #ProductBoycott at the same time then the algorithm will merge both the trends and show them as #BoycottProduct.

TYPES OF TWITTER TRENDS

Topics can already be distinguished between different types and genres but when it comes to Twitter trends, it mainly differs as twitter trending topics and twitter trending hashtags. So having a look at both of them-

1. Twitter Trending Topic-

These are the words or phrases that are used by people in tweets according to their interests, words can differ but still be related to the same topic. These words which are used or mentioned frequently by the people in tweets are then termed the Twitter trending topics.

2. Twitter Trending Hashtag-

As you have seen the # sign following before the keyword or phrase. It is used to convert that word into a hashtag and let people know the related topics and follow the conversation in search.

How many tweets does it take to trend?

There is no specific number of tweets to show how many tweets are required to make a topic trend. However, it is determined within the country and zone level. Some trending hashtags have hit the road to Twitter trends with just 500 tweets whereas some might achieve the same fate after 50000 tweets.

Are retweets counted as trending?

Retweets are not considered while calculating trending topics, instead they are shown as a conversation. However retweets do affect the trending hashtags if any # is mentioned in the retweet.

Mentioning of any # in a retweet is counted as a number, increasing the number of users of that particular hashtag. Maybe this is the reason why we often see hashtags in the trending section instead of topics.

How do I make twitter trend faster?

Making a twitter trend go faster is not easy and is not even possible for an individual user. Instead, promoting a trend or topic can only be achieved by multiple use of the same topic while making a spike. Hence it can only be achieved by a group of a large numbers of people.

To promote a hashtag or a topic people also organise different campaigns and online events. It also helps one to promote their content to the targeted audience and allows them to pay only after the targeted audience is engaged with their content.
